Matter Of Fact . . . By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

On The President's Desk

WHEN HE RETURNS to Washington from his vacation, President Eisenhower will face a major report on the nation's budget for the coming year. The report, which is due in early January, will contain recommendations for billions of dollars in defense spending.

The report, which is called the "Eisenhower Report," will be issued by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The report is expected to recommend an increase in defense spending of between $1 and $2 billion dollars.

The report will be presented to the President in a meeting scheduled for early next week. The President is expected to make a decision on the report within the next few days.

President Eisenhower has said that he will make every effort to ensure that the recommendations in the report are followed. He has also said that he will work closely with the Joint Chiefs of Staff to ensure that the nation's defense needs are met.

The report is expected to include recommendations for the development of new weapons systems, including missiles and nuclear weapons. It is also expected to include recommendations for the expansion of the nation's military forces.

The President is expected to be closely involved in the decision-making process. He has said that he will make every effort to ensure that the recommendations in the report are followed.
