MEMORANDUM FOR: The Secretary
FROM: INR - Thomas L. Hughes
SUBJECT: DOD DeSoto Patrol Chronology

Attached is the official DOD chronology for the record on the DeSoto Patrol incidents last week. It has gone forward to the White House.

This is an adequate and routine summary. The following five points do not perhaps come through this chronology as sharply as they might and I list them only for clarification.

1. The order to attack on August 2 (first Maddox incident) seems to have been given when Maddox was on the leg of its patrol closest to the DRV mainland. Shortly thereafter Maddox reached its closest point to the mainland (11 miles from shore, and 9 from Hon Me island).

2. However, it was pursued and attacked while going in a southeasterly direction, away from the mainland. Since the attacking units were under orders to keep in close touch with headquarters at all times, it is unlikely that they pursued the US vessel out to sea on their own initiative. Furthermore, the second attack, while possibly ordered when Maddox was relatively close to shore, took place about 60 miles to sea, reflecting a high command decision to pursue the assault.

3. The command chain was Hanoi to Haiphong (Naval Headquarters) to Port Wallut (Northern Fleet base) to the PGM's in control of the attack (apparently T142 and T146 in the first assault). All this also proves it to be a DRV operation.

4. The Maddox was closely shadowed between the first and second attacks especially during daylight hours.

5. There were about 36 hours between the OP 34A raid on Hon Me and Hon Ngu and the assault on the Maddox. It is possible that the DRV looked upon the Maddox approach to its shores as the sign of another imminent attack. But the time gap of a day and a half, the Maddox pulling away from shore as daylight ended, and DRV experience with an earlier and similar destroyer patrol in February-March 1964 make this unlikely.
