84221	4/15/2016	4/18/2016	JOHN GREENEWALD	I requested this more than 2 years ago, and received a GLOMAR response. With the time that has elapsed, I ask that the information be searched for again, and be considered for acknowledgement and release. According to a September 12, 2013, article published by Mother Jones: "Buried in a Brazilian television report on Sunday was the disclosure that the NSA has impersonated Google and possibly other major internet sites in order to intercept, store, and read supposedly secure online communications. The spy agency accomplishes this using what's known as a "man-in-the-middle (MITM) attack," a fairly well-known exploit used by elite hackers. This revelation adds to the growing list of ways that the NSA is believed to snoop on ostensibly private online conversations. I respectfully request a copy of all documents pertaining to this incident, including the presumed Power Point Presentation (in it's entirety) referenced in the Mother Jones article above. Also, please include all documents relating to the NSA impersonating Google to intercept, store and/or read to collect information.	Neither Confirm Nor Deny
