COMPROMISES OF COMINT INFORMATION

1. The following report of COMINT compromises cover the period from 5 April 1954 to 15 May 1954.

a. On 5 April 1954, a communications security violation occurred at Detachment E, 333rd Communications Reconnaissance Company, Nome, Alaska. On that date portions of four messages, one classified SECRET CODEWORD and three classified CONFIDENTIAL were inadvertently enciphered in depth and subsequently transmitted over communication circuits vulnerable to interception. These messages must be considered compromised. The subject violation, if intercepted and decrypted, would compromise our success in the recovery of a [redacted]

b. On 12 April 1954 a communications security violation occurred at the 34th Radio Squadron Mobile. On that date a portion of a message classified CONFIDENTIAL was inadvertently transmitted in plain language over a landline teletype circuit to Wheelus Air Force Base, Tripoli, Libya. Since the relevant transmission was vulnerable to interception, the information must be considered compromised. The subject violation if intercepted, would [redacted]

c. On 15 May 1954 a communications security violation occurred at the National Security Agency Communication Center, Washington 25, D. C. On that date a portion of a message classified SECRET CODEWORD was inadvertently transmitted in the clear over a landline communication circuit to the Navy Security Station (OP-302) Washington 25, D. C. Since the relevant transmission was vulnerable to interception, the information must be considered compromised. The subject violation, if intercepted, would expose our system of case notations and our use of RAD numbers to indicate callsign continuity.
